On the other hand many were so anxious to leave the city while the flood was at its height, that fear drove them to take many desperate chances.

Black Beauty Picture Is Again At Glendale

It was pressing business that took Squire Gordon to town on a stormy Lamps burned in many homes all went ahead bravely over the slippery road, through pools of mud, fighting the gale which almost threw him off his feet again and again. The return trip was made under terrible conditions, and twice, with the way barred in two directions, the Squire was compelled to seek other roads.

Millions of men, women and young children have shuddered over the dangers to Black Beauty recounted lights of the sentries glimmering like in the chapter called "A Stormy Day." Both Admit "City Is Clean" While Glendale grows merrily on, the two Los Angeles morning papers are holding a "blue war" of their own in regards to this city. One says that Glendale is in the throes of Puritanism. The other explains that it is not. And they all admit that it is a "clean city" which should be conducive to more residents.
